

ASRS

American Society of Retina Specialists

Adrienne W. Scott, MD

Adrienne W. Scott, MD is an associate professor of ophthalmology at the Wilmer Eye Institute at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. Dr. Scott is a vitreoretinal surgeon, and oversees the Wilmer Retinal Fellowship training program. Dr. Scott performs research in sickle cell retinopathy and retinal imaging. Dr. Scott's additional leadership positions include her roles as the Medical Director of the Wilmer Bel Air satellite clinic and ambulatory surgery center. Dr. Scott is a member of the Macula Society, the Retina Society, the American Society of Retinal Specialists (ASRS), the Association for Research and Vision in Ophthalmology (ARVO), and the American Academy of Ophthalmology (AAO). Dr. Scott received her medical degree from the Drexel University College of Medicine, and went on to complete both ophthalmology residency and fellowship at the Duke University Eye Center prior to her joining the Wilmer faculty.